

Moholy-Nagy's latest gouaches, sent by him to BMC just before his death; a large group of modern etchings by William Hayter and his best students, assembled especially for BMC by Alice T. Mason; fourteen pen and inks by Ben Zion and four gouaches by Maurer; twenty gouache abstractions by George McNeil.

Two student shows were also held:

A group show of seventy-one oils, water colors, and gouaches; the first semester work of twenty-five art students, many of them complete beginners; a group show of over sixty line drawings, the second semester work of twenty students in the drawing class.

At the Allen High School in Asheville on April 28th a concert of Mozart music was performed by Charlotte Schlesinger, Gretel Lowinsky, Julius Scheir, Florence Fogelson, and Fanny Hobart.

Students who have contributed music to the Sunday morning services of the Moore General Hospital's chapel include Lucy Swift, Fanny Hobart, Louis Selders, and Dorothy Cole.

On May 17th a sizeable audience from Asheville and Black Mountain helped celebrate the revival of dramatics in the College when there one act plays were produced by a group of students under Arthur Penn's direction.

The May 1st issue of Heute (American Occupation Authority's bi-monthly publication in Munich, Germany) carried a two page spread of pictures and an article about BMC. This was due to John Evarts' persistence on both sides of the Atlantic.

Theodore Dreier and Albert William Levi left May 25th for two weeks in New York and Boston where they will try to raise money. Lorna Blaine (101 East 85th Street, New York City) is acting as their secretary and will welcome news, names, and addresses of any prospective donors.
